Dear Client,

This letter is intended to provide important information regarding the life insurance policy noted above. We understand the policy is subject to a split-dollar arrangement. Taxation of a split-dollar plan can vary by the date the arrangement was entered into, the terms of the agreement, the insurance issuer, whether the insurance coverage is single-life or joint-life and whether the arrangement was "materially modified" since inception.

For plans entered into before September 18, 2003, the IRS guidance found in Notice 2002-8 indicates that as long as the parties continue to treat and report the value of the life insurance protection as an economic benefit, the Service will not currently tax growth in policy cash value even if it exceeds the portion payable (for example) to the employer (so-called "equity" plans). So, for these plans, the economic benefit calculation depends, in part, simply on selecting the correct "rate". The chart on the next page details possible rates based on when the plan was established and if the plan was "materially modified".

For plans entered into on or after September 18, 2003, based on the IRS guidance found in final regulations, there are two mutually exclusive approaches to the tax treatment of such plans. One is called the "economic benefit regime" and the second is the "loan regime." The information enclosed assumes you have determined that your arrangement meets the criteria of the "economic benefit regime." A split-dollar arrangement falling under the "loan regime" is subject to different taxation and will not be discussed in this letter or accompanying material.

The Lincoln National Life Insurance Company and Lincoln Life & Annuity Company of New York (Lincoln) is not privy to all of the information necessary to determine a final economic benefit. However, we have included in this letter the information available to us that you may need in order to help calculate the economic benefit for your split-dollar arrangement, along with a worksheet. The information and calculations contained in this letter are provided for your convenience and are based on general split-dollar principles that may not apply to your specific case. We strive to provide accurate and authoritative information regarding the subject matter, however, Lincoln is not in a position to render legal, accounting, or other professional advice with respect to split-dollar arrangements. If legal or tax advice is required or questions arise, you should contact your legal counsel or professional tax advisor. * The term “materially modified” has not been defined by the IRS. Examples of changes that do not materially modify the plan include: change of premium mode, change in the beneficiary, change in loan interest rate, changes required to maintain the contract as life insurance under section 7702, or change of address. Lincoln is unable to make such a determination for any policy subject to a split-dollar arrangement.

TAXATION OF CASH VALUES ON "EQUITY" SPLIT-DOLLAR PLANS

The final split-dollar regulations added rules that tax other features in certain split-dollar plans (e.g. an "equity" plan where an employer limits its recovery to premiums advanced). These rules are ONLY applicable to plans with an arrangement date AFTER 9/18/03 OR that have been "materially modified".

If a plan meets the criteria, it may be subject to additional taxation as follows:

- Traditional economic benefit taxation AND
- Taxation on the amount of cash value the non-owner has current access to (to the extent that amounts were not taken into account in previous years) AND
- Taxation based on the value of "other benefits" provided to the non-owner.

*The information enclosed assumes you have determined that your arrangement meets the criteria of the "economic benefit regime." A split-dollar arrangement falling under the "loan regime" is subject to different taxation and will not be discussed in this letter or accompanying material.
